The Tables Turned.

An odd case of assault and battery was revealed yesterday afternoon when half a dozen Japanese, including one woman, came to the police station, the woman seemingly being in the custody of the others. Five minutes later all were in the jailyard, a general charge of assault and battery being preferred against the men. On Thursday the woman rose about the back of one of the men and, according to his story, she failed to pay for the privilege. Yesterday she was seen going down to the beach near Iwilei, and the hackman and several others followed her. She was forcibly taken in charge by the group, placed in the back and then carried triumphantly to the police station, where the men expected the woman would be compelled to give up her fare. The tables, however, were turned, and the smiles left their faces when all were ordered booked for assault.

Death of Geo. Dall.

George Dall, the well known carpenter and contractor, died last night about 10 o'clock at the Sinclair residence on Union Square, next to the opera house. Mr. Dall met with an accident about three months ago while superintending the carpentry construction in the new Lewers & Cooke building, by falling from the second story to the ground floor. One of his legs was broken, as were a couple of ribs, compelling him to remain in the house until about a month ago. Lately he has had trouble with his heart, and death ensued from this cause. Horsemen Now at Maui.

Quite a bunch of horsemen are on Maui now for the races, the Mauna Loa yesterday taking such well known men as Gus Schuman, Willie Lucas, Dickey Davis, Thomas, Piggett, Ballentine, Dickenson and others. They will stay the week and will have the best time they can in addition to the fact that they will have a little speculation on the side over the races. The information of the Advertiser as to the presence of the string of McKenize at Wailuku was incorrect. These horses have already been shipped to California, and there will be none but Honolulu and local animals in the competitions at the Maui events.
